To whom it may concern.

You won this case in ever court in the land at every level. You even won it in the supreme court. And you settle for wishy-washy terms which Microsoft will side step by moving to web services - that will make all of this irrelevant.

How was this possible? Kelly-Kotar would never have gone against the Supreme Court who confirmed Microsoft is indeed a monopolist. So in the end the industry and the public needed future behavioural protection from this monopolist and you didn't provide it.

America is fighting for economic survival. Thousands of companies and innovations needed to be protected from this behemoth which has 31 billion in savings. These little companies like Real Networks and Red Hat needed you to collar the monopolist and give them a chance. You failed to protect them. Now small companies like mine have no protection from the monopolist, just when the economy was turning sour.

Don't for one second think their "better" citizen rubbish will stand. They screwed you in 92 and they screwed you again now. When will you learn? You and your team should be ashamed. You win everything at every level and you lose anyway. Bush must be proud.

Sincerely,
Mark.
